The Origins of Brandy

- The name "Italian Brandy" is reserved for the spirit produced in Italy, obtained by the distillation of wine - from grapes grown and vinified in the national territory - and its consecutive aging in oak barrels, unpainted and uncoated, for a minimum period of 1 year. In order to be admitted to consumption, the Italian Brandy must have an alcoholic strength of no less than 38 degrees.
- It is in the 19th century that the most important and historical producers of Brandy, many of whom are still on the market, arise.
- At the end of World War II, in 1948, an agreement was signed between France and Italy concerning the protection of the designations of origin in favor of products of French origin, such as "Cognac" and "Armagnac". As a consequence, all the Italian and foreign distillers had to renounce the name Cognac, reserved only for French distillates produced in the area delimited between Charente and Charente Maritime, thus beginning the use of the term "Brandy" to indicate their own wine distillates.

- Vintage reproduction of the first products created by Carpenè Malvolti;
- Unique packaging, characterized by a very dark glass bottle with a central frieze that prints the initials of the Brand. The label, enriched by an ancient decoration, presents three rings surmounted on the graphics, which are an emblem and symbol of the period of refinement of the distillate (1 ring every 3 years of aging).
- 1868 Brandy 9ys is a distillate of wine aged in Slavonian and Limousine Oak barrels for a minimum period of 9 years.
- Intense amber-yellow color, with a moderate alcohol content and a complex and ethereal bouquet of dried fruit, dried grapes, and dark chocolate. Persistent aftertaste, slightly tannic in the mouth with a pleasantly spicy finish. Distilled by meditation, excellent to taste after a meal or with dark chocolate.
